"It took more than 1,500 hours and 138 people to build Aimee's Wing," said Stephen Haines, vice president of sales for Pulte Homes in Georgia. "It was a special day for everyone involved since they could finally see the fruits of their labor and see the decorated new space. We are so pleased to be a part of building Aimee's Wing and want to thank our trade partners who exceeded our expectations to create a space that Aimee will love."

The two-story space features a new bedroom, a sunroom that allows Aimee to enjoy nature all around, a fitness room for rehabilitation, the new Pulte Planning Center, which will be her main study area for her continued education in psychology, and an elevator to access other parts of the home, such as the kitchen. In addition, the existing home's exterior received a facelift with new painting and landscaping features, as well as a new driveway.
